

From: jtolar@nycap.rr.com
To: microsoft.atr(a)usdoj.gov
Date: 1/24/02 12:51pm
Subject: The government should be the sole expression of power of citizens. When any person, in Microsoft's c

The government should be the sole expression of power of citizens. When any person, in Microsoft's case, a corporate person wields too much power other persons' freedoms are placed in jeopardy. It is all the worse when a corporate citizen abuses its great power such as Microsoft has done. But in truth no citizen corporate or private should ever hold great power at all unless it is elected by the people to do so.

If the foundation of American Democracy and Republic is to be sustainable it must prevent any citizen from having power far in excess of any other by which it can then rival that of the nations elected officials. Microsoft past actions only demonstrate why this principle is sound and why we should take away its ability to bully the market. Quite simply, if it goes unchecked, later will we have the ability to stop Microsoft from bullying the the nation?

James Tolar

---

mail2web - Check your email from the web at <http://mail2web.com/> .